Monsoon Semester 3 in 2024

1. Department:	Not Applicable
2. Faculty:	Legal Studies
3. Course Code:	LW-009 (Compulsory)
4. Course Title:	International Human Rights Law (IHRL)
5. Number of Credits:	4
6. Course objectives:

The IHRL course aims to equip students with practical legal reasoning and argumentation skills on cases and current events that raise questions about the topics covered. It also seeks to provide students with a global understanding of the origins, operation, and boundaries of international human rights protection systems and current developments in the field. In addition to providing students with the necessary understanding of the topics covered in class, it also aims to help them develop their language skills, address legal queries arising from real-world situations, and, eventually, apply the principles of international law competently and professionally. The IHRL course will increase students' knowledge and comprehension of applicable international human rights standards and mechanisms and their ability to analyse complex human rights issues critically. It will do this by examining the leading human rights laws and the primary mechanisms for monitoring and compliance with human rights.

Through engaging in hands-on activities in the classroom, students will also strengthen their application of international human rights standards and their problem-solving, writing, advocacy, public speaking, communication, and presenting skills. The course will be problem-oriented, meaning that students will analyse the human rights concerns brought up by real-life situations and concentrate on the applicability of current programmes, policies, mechanisms, and standards. They will also think about possible paths for solutions that aim to improve these situations. By the time this course ends, students should be able to: - Understand and critically evaluate legal issues regarding the operation of the international systems of protection of human rights; - Have a thorough understanding of public international human rights law; - Develop the ability to argue and evaluate complex global legal issues, including those arising from current events; - Develop written and oral communication skills regarding the topics covered in the course and use them also to argue with logical and legal thoroughness and propriety of legal language.

7. Minimum prerequisites for taking this course, if any:	Nil
8. Course Structure with units if applicable:	See Below
